

About the Author

Bobbi Linkemer was a writing coach, ghostwriter, and editor before she retired in 2019 at the age of eighty-two. Bobbi's interest in aging is personal because she is an older adult, and practical because she is aware of the many available options to help her get the most out of life. Like so many of her contemporaries, she continues to be active physically, intellectually, and politically. She has wide-ranging interests and a desire to contribute to her community, encourage and mentor aspiring authors, and help older adults maintain their health and vitality throughout their lives.

During her fifty-year career, she wrote for magazines, non-profits, small companies, and corporations in a wide variety of industries. She has written twenty-eight and helped many aspiring authors write and publish their books. In her quest to demystify the book-writing process, she has taught writing at a community college, launched a publishing company, and developed an online course on how to write a nonfiction book.

See more about Bobbi on her Amazon page.